which was appointed in the spring to suggest improvements in the clerical departments of the town were both brought up for consideration. When the preliminaries were over, Mr. Scannell arose and said his motion had been made with an idea of clearing up the murky atmosphere. He thought with a committee of five impartial men the whole trouble would be cleared away with little fuss, and everyone would then be satisfied.

trouble would be cleared away with little fuss, and everyone would then be satisfied.

William G. Peck, chairman of the special committee, followed Mr. Scannell. He said the officials agreed there was a shortage in the treasury and the criminal had confessed it. The shortage is about one-fifth the annual income of the town. He believed the only action which should be followed was that recommended by the selectmen, to collect the shortage quietly if possible, and through the courts if necessary "Delay will do no good" said he, "for we will sooner or later be brought face to face with the idea to collect the shortage. Some want to condone the shortage and make it up out of the taxes of next year, or borrow to make it up." But this he did not believe was legal. He spoke of the sympathy of the town for Mr. Locke, who had served as town clerk 28 or 29 years, a man whose integrity has never been questioned, of sterling worth and honest to the core. He spoke of his present physical condition, the result of misplaced confidence. Sympathy could not be brought into the meeting, he said, whatever might be done outside He opposed the appointment of a committee of five. He believed great care should be maintained in the choosing of such a committee, yet he had heard upon entering the hall that the committee was already selected. He objected to a committee which was all cut and dried, and objected to the motion because it put upon the committee a burden of useless labor. Other objections raised were because the selectmen's report gives a remedy, that the report says there is ground for suit, because the town should husband its resources, and because he could see no sense in having the investigation over a second time. He thought the

Everything favored Mr. Scannell, and the victory was so overwhelming that there was hardly a chance to crow. The victor, who has himself been used to defeats, took his victory as a matter of course, and said he expected it.

The meeting was called to order by Moderator Walter A. Robinson, and articles 17, 18 and 19 were brought up for discussion. These articles related to the financial trouble of the town, the report of the selectmen and plans for future action. The tabled motion of Mr. Scannell relative to the committee of five, and the report of the special committee which was appointed in the spring to suggest improvements in the clerical despectation.

"TELL THE TRUTH."

tires After Fifteen Years of Service Lexington People Deceived by False Representations as to Franchise.

> Opposition to Avenue Widen-Food for Reflection Prepared ing Project Falls When Facts Are Known — Enterprise Corrects "Slight" Omission Relative to Railway Pro-

when the truth be toid, the whole truth sound one told, and not such arts as may be distorted to convey effections and unjust conclusions. The interprise does not intend to pose as an any for railway corporations, for such t is not in any degree, shape or manner, with the will it refuse to tell the truth, persuage the truth sustains the position of trailway company. To illustrate the fold misstatement of facts which were freulated last week, the following is a air sample which is clopped from anothair sample which is clipped from anoth-

air sample which is copperate paper:
"We will now prove to our readers beyond the shadow of a doubt that if the land is taken by the county commissioners as how petitioned the road can a considerable money by forfeiting their bond of $10,000. Section 4 of the franchise restrictions, centaining the following clause, is the only one relating to this quest. and

The real feature of objection, however, and so as follows:

The rollows the section referred to, which reads,

Soad Massachus its avenue shall, at the expense of said Lexington & Boston street. Railway company be widened according to plans approved by said board of section to a double track and why is the objection to a double track and why is the objection to a double track and why is the objection to a double track and why is the objection to a double track and why is the objection to a double track and only in the objection to a double track and why is the objection to a double track and why is the objection to a double track and why is the objection to a double track and why is it not in line with public progress? What would the remonstrants prefer—no double track at all? This would be a property of the town to adopt and as an illustration let me compare two adjusted to the same and at the basins, where ordered by the secture. Said the same and the basins, where ordered by the secture. Said the same and at the basins, where ordered by the secture. Said the same and the case of all and the same and the construction thereof, and all expenses said town shan ordered to the same and the construction thereof, and all expenses said town shan ordered to the said town may be at in consequence thereof, and said expenses so of widening said Massachusetts avenue including land dameges, construction to the full width of such location as aforesaid, all to the satisfaction of the board of selectmen. All such as the same and the construction of tities, surveys and other expenses which said town may be at in consequence thereof, and said expenses of construction of tities, surveys and other expenses which said town may be at in consequence thereof, and said town of Lexing the proposition of the board of selectmen. All surveys and other expenses which said town of the said t claimed to be the only one which refers to the question in dispute, but had there been a desire to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, section 10 might have been also quoted, which would not only have cleared up the situation but would have put a different phase upon the whole affair. This however, would very likely have destroyed the effect which the article was intended to produce, which of course would never do. The Enterprise, however, corrects that little omission by quoting section 10, which is as follows:

"This location is granted only upon the express condition that Massachusetts avenue shall be widened as aforesaid at the expense of said rallway company, and shall be valid only in Massachusetts avenue widened and constructed as here in provided, and no tracks shall be laid in any portion of said avenue that is not widened and constructed as aforesaid. And this order of location shall not confer any authority or power unless the bond herein required has been duly executed and approved as above provided." It will thus be observed that the selectmen when they granted the franchise took special pains to provide that no tracks should be laid until all the conditions have been fulfilled and thus falls the last point which was brought forward to deceive the public. The Enterprise dislikes to believe such an attempt to misdirect the people should have been deliberately made, and would much rather ascribe it to a misunderstanuing of the facts in the case on the part of those posing as advisors, but until a plea of ignorance of the facts is made, the charge of misrepresentation must hold. At the hearing, Monday, there will be no excuse for any misstatements, and should any arise they will be quickly righted, but it is not believed there will be no excuse for any misstatements, and should any arguments presented against the widening of the avenue, except from the standpoint that by so doing it will injure to some extent the general appearance along the highway.

There has been and still is

ARLINGTON WOMAN'S CLUB.

ARLINGTON WOMAN'S CLUB.

The Arlington Woman's club held an interesting meeting in the town hall on Thursday afternoon. The attractive feature of the meeting was the informal talk given by Mrs. Custer upon her nine years of life on the western frontier, during the service of her distinguished husband upon the plains. General Custer, her husband, it will be remembered, was something more than a second Phil Sheridan. He was actively engaged in every battle of the Potomac save one. During the war General Custer had eleven horses shot from under him. At the age of 25 years he was made major-general. He was fatally shot while in battle. Mrs. Custer was one year at the front during the War of the Rebellion, with her shusband, and nine years, as already stated, with him upon the plains, so she naturally drew a full house. Her talk was entirely descriptive and impersonal.

by George W. Sampson in Advance of Hearing Before Commissioners—Real Facts Which Demand Consideragal widening and such legal widening can only be made by the county commissioners of the county of Middlesex. Accordingly, as a matter of form, five citizens petitioned the county commissioners for a widening of Massachusetts avenue. The remonstrants to that petitionare placed in the position of biockers of the wheels of public progress, a most unenviable position in which to be placed for future generations to read and observe. Lexington must get out of this unprogressive rut if she ever expects to rise to the true height of a growing, thrifty suburban town.

The real feature of objection, however, is on account of the proposed construction of a double track from the Arlington line to a point near Oak street. What is and the street railways paid none of it. The widening extended for about thresmiles. In the Lexington case, the could try pays none of it, the town pays none of it, and still there can be found measured to fit, and still there can be found measured on other topics, who object to a good thing. See the chances Lexington and Lexington people have had thrown at them—the plant now known as the American Waltham Watch Co., now located at Waltham: the Lexington Gas Light Co., fathered and promoted by outside capital; the Lexington Water company, backed almost entirely by outside capital; the Lexington & Boston Street Railway company, in which the bulk of Lexington investors did not dare to invest a dollar, and whose continual cry was that a street railway within the limits of the town of Lexington would not pay for the grease on their wheels. In fact the same unprogressive spirit was manifested with the easy recollection of most of us, when the tremendous opposition to the original street railway was so rampant, but hamply so unsuccessful. Soon there will be a proposition submitted to Lexington for a national bank. I know whereof I speak, as I intend to submit the proposition myself. Lexington people will all have an opportunity to subscribe and yet I predict that outside capital will do it all because the moneyed men of Lexington are not progressive and the progressive men of Lexington haven't got the money. Acre, however, in the matter of double tracking is a chance for a great public improvement which costs nothing and which Lexington can have for the asking, and even unprogressiveness should take a back seat for once.

But after all, the question of street railways or double-tracking has no special place at this hearing. The main question is, shall the town of Lexinston accept the chance of widening Massachusetts avenue to seventy feet without cost to them. The petitioners and many others believe it to be good business: As to the damages of widening, neither the buyer nor seller is fit to judge in all cases. The pr

AS OTHERS SEE IT.

Ideas Not Essentially Our Own.

MUNICIPAL REFORM.

New York city has experienced another spasm of virtue. The disclosures made by the Mazet Inquiry were too rank to be overlooked, and Tammany has been downed again. Grandpa Knickabocker is an easy-going old chap, and his sense of smell is not overly keen, but some odors, if they be strong enough and persistent enough, do finally reach through to his consciousness. To any ordinary stench he is oblivious. The world may wag as it will, for aught he cares, so he be undisturbed in his particular chimney-corner. Tammany has usually taken special care to tread with sheathed claws and closed lips, but latterly the nails have been clattering and the teeth gnashing in view of great access of power, and at last the old gentleman has been roused.

Tammany is down; but to what avail? Tammany has been down before, and, like the ancient Antaeus, the more often Tammany is thrown to earth the stronger Tammany becomes. The reformers are earnest and sincere, no doubt, and certainly they have a praiseworthy end in view. But until they learn from Tammany itself how to break Tammany's power, and to keep it broken, so long will municipal reform in New York be spasmodic and ineffectual.

To say that Tammany is an unmixed evil is far from the truth. Croker himself, like every man, has his good points And it is exactly upon its good points, upon the good it accomplishes in the city, that Tammany depends for its strength. There are numberless charities and charitable organizations in New York, carried on by good people, and yet perhaps the most extended and farreaching in its accomplishment of results, the best organized and most effective of them all, is Tammany. Poss'bly this is surprising. But it is true, Many a family has been furnished with food and fuel in a wintry time of need by the Tammany leader of its district. Practical interest of such sort binds the voters of such families to Tammany's support effectually.

While Tammany works by these metineds, the reformers are either splurging along, with much noise and tooting of horns, and many internal dissensions, or are peacefully resting after a hard-won victory. Tammany never rests.

SUBWAY OR ELEVATED.

There is some force in the objection made to an additional subway on the ground that the temperature of an underground passage gives a chill to some persons, and that the noise is as great as that of an elevated structure. The choice is one of evils. There are sensitive individuals who are affected by the sudden change of temperature in going into a subway, but on the other hand there are as many, and probably more, who are injured by the tax upon the heart involved in climbing the long, steep stairs to the elevated, and by standing upon its exposed platforms in cold, stormy weather waiting for the

The noise of the elevated and that of "Gree subway are very different. The latpart or is troublesome to the people who are traveling underground. The former to the abutters on the line of the road. In fact this is the most serious objection to the elevated, that its noise seriously injures property on the streets through which it passes, and the people who live where they must hear the noise constantly. They are entitled to considera-

MAYOR HART'S CAMPAIGN.

So far as can be judged in Arlington the Hart campaign in Boston will have in it many of the features of a non-partisan movement. Nominally Mayor Hart will stand as the Republican candidate, but he will have the support of many of the Democrats who put efficiency before anything else in choosing the chief executive of the city. He has conducted Boston affairs on a business basis, and the taxpayers have come nearer to getting a hundred cents' worth for a dollar than they have done for many years. This will win him many votes of conservative Democrats, as it should.

President Eliot tells of a boy who re sponded "That's fair," when told by his motner that he must obey her or leave the room, and he uses him as an illustration. We are glad that there was such a boy; we hope he will live to a good old age, but President Eliot ought to know that it isn't safe to generalize from one case.

What a satisfaction it must be to know that a rumor of his death is followed by a heavy decline in the value (we mean the price) of all leading securities. Russell Sage had that pleasure, Thurs-

Old Names For Guns

As the use of artillery became more common and the advantages of portability and a greater rapidity of fire were recognized guns, except among the orien tals, became smaller, but of better workmanship and construction. Inventors began to try their hands at all sorts of improvements or attempts at improvement, and in the course of a hundred years or so the number of different pieces of cannon, large and small, muzzle or breech loading, was simply legion. There were cannon, cannon royal and demicannon, three or four classes of culverins, bombards, mortars, perriers, serpentines, carthouns, curtails, passevolants or zebratanas, basilisks, orgues, sakers, minions, mojanes, falcons and falconets, robinets, fowlers, bases, slings, portpieces, murder ers, drakes, aspics, double dogs and lagtors, to say nothing of ribadoquins, flying dragons and partridge mortars.-Gentleman's Magazine.

The Harmattan or Withering Wind. The name of harmattan has been given a periodical wind which blows from the interior of Africa toward the Atlantic during the three months of December, January and February. It sets in with a fog or dry haze which sometimes conceals the sun for whole weeks together. Everp plant, every bit of grass and leaf, in its course is withered as though it had Arlington, Arlington Heights, and Lexington been seared by heat from a furnace; often within an hour after it begins to blow green grass is dry enough to burn like Even the hardened natives lose all of the skin on exposed parts during the prevalence of this withering wind.

A Boy's Delight.

Clifford was a good sized boy, but was still in knickerbockers. He had lost a near and dear relative and was heartbro ken. A wealthy uncle on a visit to the family undertook to divert his mind. "Clifford, my boy," said the uncle "we'll go down town pretty soon, and I want you to think up something you would rather have than anything else in this world. Make up your mind now, and we'll get it, no matter what it is."

Clifford reflected for several minutes.

Then his face brightened. "Get me a pair of suspenders, uncle," he said.—Chicago Tribune.

THE HOME GOLD CURE

An Ingenious Treatment by Which Drunkards are Being Cured Daily in Spite of Themselves.

No Noxious Doses. No Weakening of the Nerves. A Pleasant and Positive Cure for the Liquor Habit.

It is now generally known and under-stood that Drunkenness is a disease and not weakness. A body filled with poison, and nerves completely shattered by periodical or constant use of intoxicating liquors, requires an antidote capable of neutralizing and eradicating this poison, and destroying the craving for intoxi-cants. Sufferers may now cure them-selves at home without publicity or loss of time from business by this wonder-ful "HOME GOLD CURE" which has been perfected after many years of close study and treatment of inebriates. The study and treatment of inebriates. The faithful use according to directions of this wonderful discovery is positively guaranteed to cure the most obstinate case, no matter how hard a drinker. Our records show the marvelous transformation of thousands of Drunkards into sober, industrious and upright men, WIVES CURE YOUR HUSBANDS!! WIVES CURE YOUR HUSBANDS!!
CHILDREN CURE YOUR FATHERS!!
This remedy is in no sense a nestrum but a specific for this disease only, and is so skillfully devised and prepared that it is thoroughly soluble and pleasant to the taste, so that it can be given in a cup of tea or coffee without the knowledge of the person taking it. cup of tea or coffee without the knowledge of the person taking it. Thousands of Drunkards have cured themselves with this priceless remedy, and as many more have been cured and made temperate men by having the "CURE" administered by loving friends and relatives without their knowledge in coffee or tea, and believe today that they discontinued of their own free will. DO NOT WAIT. Do not be deluded by apparent and misleading "improvement."
Drive out the disease at once and for all time. The "HOME GOLD CURE" is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, thus placing within reach of everybody a treatment more effectual than others costing $25 and $50. Full

A NOVEMBER WALK.

A NOVEMBER WALK.

As I am making my way along the shore of the Great Meadows, a shrill peep startles me, and as I listen, the sound again pierces the still air. It is the noise of the hylodes or whistling frogs that early in March proclaim the arrival of spring. Soon the strain of a song sparrow is heard, and presently he files into a bare American elm. Sweet bird of spring braving the frosts and storm winds to greet me, while you should be in southern climes where it is always summer!

The muskrat lodges are very conspicuous, rising high above the water. The

The muskrat lodges are very conspicuous, rising high above the water. The debris of the stream furnishes the materials from which they are constructed, sticks, mud, coarse grass and driftwood, studded with shells of fresh-water clams. While looking at a lodge, a muskrat swims quite close to me. As he approaches his home, he dives, and I do not see him again, although I wait for some time.

muskrat swims quite close to me. As he approaches his home, he dives, and I do not see him again, although I wait for some time.

A flock of small birds fly into a birch tree, where they begin to feast on the catkins. They are ruby-crowned kingliets. These birds pass the summer and breeding season in the colder portions of North America. In the months of October and November, the approach of winter in their native regions stimulates them to migrate toward the south. While feasting, they make no sound except a feeble chirp, although during the summer they have a very mellow and flutelike song. A little further on I find a dead ruby-crowned kinglet impaled on a sharp twig; a few feathers lie on the ground, while the body is only half eaten. As I scan the branches of a tree near by, I see the murderer himself, a northern shrike who does not fly away but begins a series of calls; first imitating the rasping cry of a jay so well that one would think the nut-burier was there himself; next follows the cawing of a crow, then the quacking of a dusky duck, and the warble of a bluebird. With this last note the bird flies away, and I continue my walk. The clear, cool air filled with the fragrance of withered leaves is grateful to every sense and responds in music to the baying of a hound as he sounds his clarion in the distance. Half-way across a ploughed field, I see a woodchuck sitting on his haunches eating a turnip. At my approach he runs into the stone wall, bearing his prize with him. Ere another month goes by this serf of the soil will be sleeping in his earthen hermitage.

While passing under an oak tree, I find the ground covered with acorns which have commenced to grow, and are already anchored to the earth by purple sprouts.

A MORNING SONG

A MORNING SONG.

W. R. F.

The eastern sky is blushing.
Faintly flushed with dawning day.
The hills and dales are hushing
To the cheerful roundelay
Of the harbingers of morning,
Singing their melodious warning
Of passing night,
And coming light,
And all the world arising bright
To work, and sing, and play.

Then Dream-Land, swiftly fading From the vision of the mind, Into Day-Time softly shading, Leaves the Dreamer far behind To the care, and toll, and worry, To the busy haste and hurry Of coming strife With passing Life,— And to the morn, with sweetness rife Of clover-scented wind.

EXPECTATION OF LIFE.

to the Insurance Tables.

What are your chances of living to that ripe old aux the poets tell of? If you tation tables of the life insurance gentlemen, and we're willing to accept the fignres as reliable; for the life insurance gentlemen go into this thing in a spirit the reverse of sentimental. They simply take 100,000 humans and figure out a percentage just as if the 100,000 humans were chalk on a blackboard.

Proceeding on the understanding that the 100,000 are considered at the age of ten years, each will have 48.7 more years to live. Of course some will die before collecting their life inheritance, but the 48.7 represents the average. As a matter of carefully ascertained fact there will be 749 deaths among the 100,000 before the eleventh year is reached.

This leaves 99,251 survivors, with a chance of 48.1 more years in the land of the living. But 746 of these will die before becoming twelve-year-olds.

And so it goes. If you are interested in learning how the insurance gentlemen figure these matters, look at the following table and recken how long a tenure of life the experts give you:

"Curing" Married Couples. If every wife who is trying to cure her husband and every husband who is trying to cure his wife would stop the operation and all the husbands would devote their energies to curing themselves and all the wives devote their energies to curing themselves, the homes would be a great deal happier than they are today.

There are scolding wives who are bending all of their energies to the task of curing their husbands of habits far less detrimental to the happiness of the home than the habit of scolding. There are husbands who have set themselves the task of curing their wives of imperfections of so much less consequence than the infirmities of character and temper possessed by the husband himself.—Edinburgh Scotsman.

Much Cause For Gratitude.

Of a certain bishop the following anecdote is told: While presiding over a conference a speaker began a tirade against the universities and education, expressing thankfulness that he had never been corrupted by contact with a college. After proceeding for a few minutes the bish-op interrupted with a question: 'Do I understand that Mr. X. is thankful for his ignorance?"

"Well, yes," was the answer.
can put it that way if you like."

"Well, all I have to say," said the prelate in sweet and musical tones-"all I have to say is that Mr. X. has much to be thankful for."—London Tit-Bits.

When Lionel Barrymore, son of Maurice Barrymore, first went on the stage, he got a very small part in a play. He was greatly disappointed, of course, but was glad to be there at all. Speaking of his appearance to a friend the next day, the friend said:

"Why, I saw the play, but I didn't see "You must have winked," replied Lio-nel.—New York Times.

The Years Yet Before You, According Sow the Parson Is Sometimes Worst-

He very occasionally gets it in church. as in the classic case instanced by the don't know, we do, and we'll tell you. At late Dean Ramsay, who relates that on least we have the mortality and expeccountry congregation felt and yielded to the temptation to drowsiness with a remarkable unanimity. Almost the only person apparently wideawake was the village idiot, who sat in the front of the 'loft," with steady gaze fixed on the minister. Singling him out as an example, the parson sharply rebuked his flock for their sleepiness. "Why," he exclaimed, their sleepiness. "Why," he exclaimed, "even the poor afflicted one, Daft Jamie, as ye call him, can manage to keep "Aye; but, minister," retorted awake." Jamie, not quite comprehending the situation, but dimly resenting the sudden publicity given to his doings, "if I hadna been an idiot I wad ha' been sleepin'

In a small church in Yorkshire well known to the writer one of the most regular and attentive attendants was a countryman who always closed his eyes to listen to the sermon. It helped him to think, he used to say, and that he really listened no one who undertook to question him about the discourse could doubt. On one occasion when the pulpit was occupied by a youthful cleric from a neighboring place there came a pause in the sermon. Suspecting what it meant, but not troubling to open his eyes, old John said: 'Tha can ger on wi' thy preachin'. I'm noan asleep."

Out of church the parson sometimes reteives a "nasty one," deliberately administered. I regret to say that my own grandfather once, in a moment of angry outspokenness, likened his vicar-in the presence of that worthy-to the guidepost at the cross lanes in the parish; for," said the irate and blunt old man, "it points people the road, but doesn't travel in it itself." The astonished vicar was too much taken aback to reply while his censor was within hearing, or he might have made the retort which was made by a Kentish clergyman to a similar charge. "What!" said he. "Why, you're never content. Here I tell you what you ought to do on Sunday and show you what you ought not to do the rest of the week. What more do you want? You're never satisfied."—Chambers' Journal.

One Dies For His People, the Other's People Die For Him.

Ruskin in his "Essay on War" says: 'It is wholly inconceivable to me how well educated princes who ought to be of all gentlemen the gentlest and of all nobles the most generous and whose title of royalty means only their function of doing every man 'right'-how these, I say, throughout history should so rarely pronounce themselves on the side of the poor and of justice, but continually maintain themselves and their own interests by oppression of the poor and by wresting of justice, and how this should be accepted as so natural that the word 'loyalty, which means faithfulness to law, is used as if it were only the duty of a people to be loval to their king and not the duty of a king to be infinitely more loyal to his

"How it comes to pass that a sea captain will die with his passengers and lean over the gunwale to give the parting boat its course, but that a king will not usually die with, much less for, his passengers—thinks it rather incumbent on his passengers in any number to die for him? Think, I beseech you, of the wonder of "The sea captain, not captain by divine right, but only by company's appointment; not a man of royal descent, but only a plebeian who can steer; not with the eyes of the world upon him, but with feeble chance, depending on one poor boat, of his name being ever heard above the wash of the fatal waves; not with the cause of a nation resting on his act, but pless to save so much as a child from among the lost crowd with whom he resolves to be lost, yet goes down quietly to his grave rather than break his faith to those few emigrants.

"But your captain by divine right, your captain with the hues of a hundred shields of kings upon his breast, your captain whose every deed, brave or base, will be illuminated or branded forever before unescapable eyes of men, your captain whose every thought and act are beneficent or fatal from sun rising to set ting, blessing as the sunshine or shadow ing as the night-this captain as you find him in history for the most part thinks only how he may tax his passengers and sit at most ease in his cabin.'

A Duck's Suicide.

Sportsmen who hunt ducks on inland streams and lakes have frequently known them to dive when wounded and fail to appear again. A professional guide who has shot ducks for many years along the upper Hudson says he has solved the mystery He shot a wood duck that fell wounded and dived in still water. It did not reappear, and when he came to look for it under water he could see the bird hanging with its bill to a root. It was quite dead and considerable force was necessary to loosen its hold.

The hunter firmly believes that the duck committed suicide by drowning to keep from falling into the hands of its mortal enemy-man.

Planting a Vine.

Remember when you plant a vine that you are planting for time, and make a good provision for its growth. Don't dig a hole just large enough for the plant and thrust it in, leaving it to "sink or swim, survive or perish," as best it may. Rath er do you give it a fair show for its life. Choose a place in good sunlight. Dig a hole two feet deep and a foot and a half square. Cart away the earth and fill the hole with well rotted compost, putting good garden soil on top in which to set the plant. You have thus supplied it with something to grow on, and the plant will reward you accordingly.

Nonebleed.

To stop nosebleed apply cold water or ice to the forehead and nose or ice to the back of the neck or to the roof of the mouth. If this does not check the bleeding, insert in the bleeding nostril a plug of dry cotton or wet the cotton first in a strong solution of alum water. Raising the arms high above the head sometimes stops the bleeding.

AN IRRITATING GAZE.

Studying the Feet Opposite You In a Street Car. "People sometimes look better going from you," said a man who observes things, "than coming your way. A girl with a profile that is admirable, bewitching almost, will give you the hiccough when she turns her face toward you. The handsomest man or woman has a bad point of view, or one, if not exactly bad, that he or she probably has discovered is not quite the best, and so they make it convenient to turn the other cheek.

"But a place where you can study charecter in abandon is in the row of feet on the other side of a street car. Look at them, but don't let their owners know what you are doing-at first, at least. Afterward, if you are a detestable, disagreeable, inconsiderate, unsympathetic person, just keep staring at them, up and down the row, and see them cringe and turn and draw up into the folds of skirts and toe in and out, while a dozen uncomfortable, embarrassed, poor, weak mortals over the way show by every sign and expression how they hate and fear your complacent gaze. It won't do them any good to look daggers, because you have the drop on them. They are wondering just what sort of an awkward position their feet were in when you first began gazing at them-whether you saw a white stocking through a cracked shoe.

"It never occurs to the miserable ones to look at your feet. If it does, get off at the next corner. You, who know and have seen, should never permit yourself to be made to feel the humiliation of having your feet caught, the worst one forward. Some people go through life putting their best foot forward, but there comes a day when the second step gives them away. "So if your shoes need a polish or new laces, if they are cracked across the toe or a sole coming off, if they are all run over and show how bowlegged you must be if the truth were only known, or if a dozen other things about your nether half don't just exactly suit you, don't ride on a street car after this is printed, for some one is going to take it all in sitting opposite you just as sure—well, as sure as that you have read this and have been doing the same thing yourself."-New York Mail and Express.

OLD FASHIONED FOLK.

What has become of the old fashioned man who wore a shawl?

What has become of the old fashioned woman who used to say, "Well, did you ever see the like?" What has become of the old fashioned woman who came to town on circus day with a turkey wing fan? We refuse to decide if a woman is old fashioned or not until we have tasted vegetable soup of her making. What has become of the old fashioned woman who always served pickled tongue when she had company for supper? What has become of the old fashioned men who "bearded" the children-who caught them and rubbed his whiskers against their faces?

What has become of the old fashioned woman whose fad it was not to collect spoons, teapots or steins, but to make a collection of babies? woman who thought she could not invite and Gun.

a soul to the house to eat without including the preacher and his wife?—Atchison Told of a Woman Reporter.

At a gathering of women of the press in Buffalo the following humorous story was enjoyed by the fraternity. It was related as the experience of a reporter in a country town who went to get an obit uary from a woman whose husband had hanged himself in the attic. The bereaved widow was a friend of the editor of her paper, and the reporter was instructed to make no allusion to the hanging in talking with her. The first remark of the reporter, however, led up to a faux pas. "Very pleasant weather," she said, by way of a beginning.

"Yes," answered the widow, "but we haven't had a pleasant Monday for washing in a long time."

"Oh, I shouldn't think you would mind that," said the reporter. "Mamma always envied you. She said you had such a good attic in which to hang things."-Buffalo Express.

Prisons Should Teach, Not Punish

A prison should not be an inferno, but a purgatory. The criminal is almost in variably weak of will and mind and body He does not understand himself or his re lation to society. His ideals are wrong. His passions have never known check In this state of barbarism he is dangerous, and society in its own defense sends him into the exile of a prison. If it does no more, he returns at the end of his sentence worse than he went in. When it opens his cell door, it must open the way to a new life. The prison must be a school, a shop, a church, rather than a place of penitence, for till the mind and conscience are weakened there will be no penitence, only anger and nursing of revenge.—Saturday Evening Post.

Lake Winnebago.

Lake Winnebago is remarkable for its shallowness. Although it is about 28 miles in length and 10 or 12 miles in width, it has a depth of only 25 feet. This is due to the fact that the lake's outlet is constantly deepening and that the inlet is gradually filling its bottom with a sandy or earthy deposit. But Winnebago's shallowness makes it re-markably rich in fish. Indeed, it is one of the most productive known. Shallow lakes always have more fish than deep ones; chiefly, perhaps, because there is more vegetation on the bottom of the shallow ones.

Birthday Cake Candles An ingenious woman has discovered new way of fastening the states to a birthday cake. Heat the eye end of a large needle and run it into the lower end of each candle, about half way. The other half, thrust into the frosting of the cake, holds the candle firm and does not break the icing.

THE BEAVER IN WINTER.

His Curious Method of Breathing Under the Ice.

"The beaver is really a sort of portable pulp mill, grinding up most any kind of wood that comes his way. I once measared a white birch tree, twenty-two inches through, cut down by a beaver. A single beaver generally, if not always, amputates the tree, and when it comes down the whole family falls to and has a regular frolic with the bark and branches. A big beaver will bring down a fair sized sapling-say, three inches through-in about two minutes and a large tree in Pbout an hour.

"One of the queerest facts about the beaver is the rapidity with which his long, chisel shaped teeth recover from an injury. I have known beavers to break their teeth in biting a trap, and when I caught them again ten days afterward you couldn't see a sign of the break-the teeth had grown out to their former perfection in that short period.

"As compared with the otter or mink, the beaver is a very slow swimmer. His front legs hang by his side, and he uses only his webbed hind feet for purposes of swimming. It is easy to capture one in a canoe if you can find him in shoal water. He is a most determined fighter, but clumsy and easy to handle. If he could get hold of you with his teeth, he would almost take a leg off; so you want to watch him sharply. The place to grab him is by the tail.

"The ability of a beaver to remain under water for a long time is really not so tough a problem as it looks. When the lake or pond is frozen over, a beaver will come to the under surface of the ice and expel his breath, so that it will form a wide, flat bubble. The air, coming in contact with the ice and water, is purified, and the beaver breathes it again. This operation he can repeat several times. The otter and muskrat do the same thing.

"It almost takes a burglar proof safe to hold a newly captured beaver. I once caught an old one and two kittens up the north branch of the Sou-west, put them in a barrel and brought them down to Miramichi lake. That night she gnawed a hole through the barrel and cleared out, leaving her kittens. They were so young that I had no hope of feeding them, so I released them in the hope that the mother might find them. Soon after that I caught a big male beaver. I made a large log pen for him of dry spruce, but the second night be cut a log and disap-

"Beavers, when alarmed, generally make up stream, so I went to the brook where a little branch came in, and I thought I would go up that a little way, and I hadn't gone more than ten rods before I came across my lad sitting up in the bed of the brook having a lunch on a stick he had cut. He actually looked as if he knew he was playing truant when he caught sight of me out of the side of his eye.

"I picked him up by the tail, brought him back, put him in the pen, supplied him with plenty of fresh poplar and he seemed as tame as possible and never gave me any more trouble. I brought him out to Stanley, where he lived a long time. Turnbull had a mongrel dog which was jealous of the beaver, and one day attacked him. He did that only once, for the beaver nipped the dog's tail off quick-What has become of the old fashioned ern'n a cat would catch a mouse."-Rod

Memories of the Tan.

In the old circuses the tan used to fly up now and then and dust the stalls, and now and then a horse's hoof would be against the side of the ring with a heathud. All this is gone. There are no bra zen discords now, no heavy thuds, ro fly ing aromatic tan, and no stables. It used to be a rapture to go through the stables in the interval-down the long, sloping passages, with gas jets in wire cagesand find oneself between the tails of countless piebald horses extending as far as the eye could reach. Here and there a glimpse might be caught of an acrobat or a clown or, more exquisite sighe, of a fair equestrienne. The friendly, warm scent of those stables I can recall at this moment. Now it is no more. It used to puff out into the street and act as a more attractive invitation to the passerby than any prismatic poster. And with it came muffled strains of the band and the crack of a whip, all combining in the late comer to work his anticipation to intensity .-Cornhill.

Quoted the Bible.

Several years ago a Baptist minister who was anxious to be appointed to a vacancy in a Georgia church went to one of the old residents and asked him what he should preach about in his trial sermon. He was informed that a good topic would be the proper rearing of children, who in that section were greatly neglected. When the would be pastor arose to preach the next morning, he started out

"I'm gwine to preach to you today on de subjec' of chilluns. You ain't raisin' 'em right. Instid of dem bein' in Sunday school dey is strayin' away, fightin' and playin' marbles, and de Bible is bitterly ag'in de las' one of dese acts, bec'se it says in two or three places, 'Marble [mar-vel] not I say unto you.'"

The Stone Tree.

There is a tree which grows in Mexico called the "chijol," or stone tree. It is of enormous proportions, both in circumference and height. It has a number of branches spreading out widely and carrying leaves of a yellowish green color. The wood is extremely fine and easily worked in a green state. It is not given to either warping or splitting. The wonderful part about it is that after being cut the wood gets gradually harder, and in the course of a few years it is absolutely petrified, whether left in the open air or buried in the ground. From this timber houses can be built that would in a few years become completely fireproof and would last as though built of stone.

Too Brave to Be Killed.

The Atlanta Journal is authority for the statement that General Stonewall Jackson saved the life of William Mc-Jackson saved the life of William Mc-Kinley. "At the battle of Antietam," it says, "one of General Jackson's men raised his gun to fire at the Union soldier, who stood just opposite the creek. As he was about to fire General Jackson said: 'Stop! Lower your gun. I have watched that boy all day. He is too brave to be killed.' A CORDIAL RECEPTION.

Mayor-elect Low, of New York, received the other evening a most cordial reception at the white house. President Roosevelt had his carriage at the Pennsylvania station to meet his honor, the mayor. Mayor Low is a man after President Roosevelt's own heart and courage, so that the two naturally join hands in every good word and work. No one rejoices more than does President Rooscvelt over the election of the Fusion ticket in New York city.

THE TOWN OFFICIAL IS RIGHT.

The town official is right who said to us the other day that the old Cutter schoolhouse had better been burned rather than to have been sold and made to occupy a site which hides the new building from view to one making his way up Massachusetts avenue. The fact is, the ground immediately opposite the new Cutter school building on Massachusetts avenue should have been purchased by the town for the building itself. There is such a thing as being "penny wise and pound foolish."

ROBBINS' LIBRARY AGAIN.

We offer no apology for so frequently writing of Robbins' library. Its invitation is to all Arlington to come and partake of the feast it has prepared. It is our daily hour of worship when we go to Robbins' library. We are daily surprised, week in and week out, at those we never see there. It is quite impossible for one to instruct others until he has first been instructed himself. One cannot give out in the world of morals or in the world of intellect, until he has first taken in. CHARLES T. SCANNELL.

Charles T. Scannell showed himself on Monday evening, at the Arlington town meeting, a leader of men. He stated his case clearly and succinctly and with such convincing force that he had with him a large and enthusiastic majority. Mr. Scannell was especially well fortified in what he so tersely said, inasmuch that bis stirring speech Monday evening was along the same line of thought that he has entertained in regard to the safe management of the town's finances for the past six years. Charles T. Scannell surely has the courage of his convictions. The victory he won has brought to the very fore-front.

the ODORE ROOSEVELT IS PRESIDENT. There can be no question that Theodore Roosevelt is the president of the United States. His appointments thus far made, point this fact. In filling the position attaching itself to the port of New York, he has set Tom Platt aside with all the grace and ease of an expert. And Lemuel Eli Quigg left the white er man than when he entered the presidential mansion. Mr. Roosevelt said to Mr. Quigg, "the president will make the appointment in question," and so it was that Mr. Quigg immediately picked up his hat and went, "not standing on the order of his going." Yes, Theodore Roosevelt is undoubtedly president.

THE ADJOURNED TOWN MEETING.

The adjourned Arlington town meeting, Monday evening, was a business affair conducted in a business way. The financial condition of the town brought out a full house. The Enterprise is of the decided opinion that the town has acted wisely in the appointment of a committee of five for the purpose of thoroughly investigating the town books. The members of that committee, Charles T. Scannell, Howard W. Spurr, William N. Winn, George G. Allen and Horace A. Phinney, are all men of business ability and experience, and whose judgment and honesty are unquestioned, Arlington ubstantially declared on Monday evening by its overwhelming vote that she desires to learn from A to Z all about her financial condition-and this is right.

LIFE AT THE WHITE HOUSE.

The thoroughly domestic life at the White House under the loving management of President and Mrs. Roosevelt is captivating the affectionate heart of the nation. It is altogether refreshing to read of the Roosevelt boys sliding down the bannisters of the stairway at the White House; and it is a delight to know that the half dozen children of the president and the first lady in the land scamper from cellar to garret of the presidential mansion, just as the boys and girls do in their simple, country home. The White House today smacks of home-life. President and Mrs. sevelt are doing much in emphasizing American home-life and the American public school life. They believe, in a practical way, in both. They welcome with open arms the children. A baby in the White House is a declaration in italics of all that belongs to domesticity. Mrs. Roosevelt as a mother shows herself a greater and nobler woman than simply the president's wife, and President Roosevelt as the father of six jolly, romping children reveals himself as a believer in the fundamental truth, that the home-life is the very corner stone and hasis of all true and enduring national life. It is fortunate for the American people that the White House is made merry with the children's "And a little child shall lead

WHO SAID IT?

Who of the early writers said "I embrace the truth and carees it."

ever he may have been the saying should have immortalized his name. 'Ine fact with the most of us is our unwillingness to even receive the truth, and more are we unwilling to caress it. But the truth will out in spite of whatever we may do to circumvent it, so as a matter of mere policy it is better to embrace the truth at once: while as a matter of manly honesty it is the only way to do. But the most of us keep right on with our lying. either by word or action, vainly deceiving ourselves all the while that we are getting the best end of the bargain. O, for a manly man, and for a womanly woman! One who dares tell the truth, let what will come. We always feel like repenting in sackcloth and ashes whenever our pen fails to write the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. With the rest of our kind, we have our weak moments, but we always feel ourselves less a man by reason of them. "I don't dare" is the saying of a coward. To grow pale and shake from head to foot in the presence of some great overshadowing truth is the supremest of cowardice. What are we here for anyway? Nothing other than to tell God's truth and to do God's work. And whenever we fail to do all this, whether as journalists, or as clergymen, or as representatives in whatever department of labor, we sell ourselves for mere material gain. The prayer of all official life and of the varied professions should be, 'O Lord, give us more courage and more backbone." This is our prayer.

THE "ANOPHELES."

It has been discovered that the malaria-carrying mosquito abounds in prolific numbers in the low lands in near neighborhood to Arlington, Cambridge Somerville and Belmont. This little pest will tap a person afflicted with malaria, and then transplant the germs to the cuticle of a healthy person, thus indefinitely spreading the disease. While Cambridge and Belmont have done something to exterminate this death-breeding mosquito, Arlington and Somerville have done nothing. Arlington should no longer delay a matter of so much vital importance. W. Lyman Underwood, of Belmont, is the man who discovered that this pest is doing its deadly work in this vicinity. Mr. Underwood is a member of the Belmont board of health. The swamps and marshes in Arlington need to be made over at once. Let it no longer be said by our physicians that the patient suffering from what has been or is termed malaria, dies from heart-failure. Let it be understood from this date on, that malaria simply means that a man with poisoned blood has been tapped by this Anopheles, and the germs of his disease transmitted to the healthy person of another, thus carrying malaria throughout the entire neighborhood. In a sanitary way Arlington should leave nothing undone for the promotion of the public health. Good drainage is the first requirement of any inhabited locality Arlington has acres of dead land along its waters where the malarious mosquito breeds in rapidly multiplying numbers. Arlington should "fill up the waste lands," as the Bible puts it. Let us move on the deadly enemy at once.

THANKSGIVING DAY. Thanksgiving day had its birth right under the shadow of Plymouth Rock. It was immediately following that terrible winter of starvation and death, that the survivors of that Pilgrim band assembled on that "stern and rock-bound coast," and offered up devout thanks that a few of its number had been spared to tell the story of their wonderful deliverance from the perils of the sea and from the greater perils of that deadly winter. Yes, Thanksgiving day had its birth amidst the intense life which severed itself from the mother country that it might stand out in all that individual oneness which belongs to every man, woman and child whom God has created. Those early Puritan and Pilgrim fathers and mothers were terribly in earnest. They counted the cost before they set out from their homes across the water. They were willing to dare and to die, if need be, for the eternal right. Life to them meant a direct gift from God, so it was that they acknowledged the right of neither priest nor king to rule over them. One with God is always a majority, provided that one has the conviction and courage born of the right. Thanksgiving day in those earlier years was made vibrant with thanksgiving and praise. And so it is that this holy-day of the years comes down to us with all the rich memories of a past which foretold or prophesied a nation of God's own choosing. On Thursday of next week this annual coming together for worship and praise will occur throughout the length and breadth of this land of ours. On Wednesday of next week the absent boy and girl will turn their faces homelovingly and eagerly for the return of the absent ones will greet them at the old home with outstretched arms. A reunited household will find expression in songs of praise. Even "the vacant chair" will again be occupied, and "the voice that is still" will again be heard Thanksgiving day brings the two worlds in loving touch. The river is re-crossed so that the "here" and the "there" meet once more and clasp glad hands again. To us the memory of this day of thank-offering in the home of our youth is the richest of legacies. We do not forget that it was from this town of Arlington, years ago, we packed with keen delight our gripsack for our homeward way to this yearly feast of good things under the paternal roof. And how precious those meetings! One is born anew with the blessing of the old home upon him again. These yearly reviews are indeed a second birth. Thanksgiving day gives emphasis to the home-life, and herein is found its chiefest value. It recognizes in a loving way the family relationship. It breathes of the old homestead. Its story is that of domestic life, May every home in Arlington and near neighborhood hold a love feast on taxes high enough to suit the most fastidious, and claimed Arlington was the highest taxed town in the county save two. He was willing to adopt the recommendation of the selectmen, and let the matter rest without any further investigation that their report was an honest one and very complete. The long time necessary to get the report ready had created a feeling of unrest, but now the report was out, there was a different aspect on the case. Mr. Peck wanted the selectmen's recommendation adopted and the remainder of the report referred to the committee of 21 for discussion. The question was divided and the town voted to commence suit by accepting the report, and a motion to substitute Mr. Scannell's motion was adopted by a large majority. Then Mr. Scannell again took the floor.

He said in part: "ine gentleman has taken pains to warn you of the danger-ous possibility of having something forced upon you that you don't want. He was afraid you would load upon the He was afraid you would load upon the committee some unnecessary burden. If, however, as he suggests, the five men have been selected, it is fair to absume they are willing to undertake the task. His anxiety is therefore rather far-fetched. We are surprised that a man who attends town meetings should wonder at any pre-arranged plan, and especially when as a pre-arranger the gentleman is the past grand master of the town. I was opposed to the reference of the matter to the committee of 21. I think you are working that committee committee ought to do it all." Mr. Scannell mentioned the sympathy argument and said he had not waited until Mr. Locke was on the verge of the grave before store and exchange old lamps for new ones.

posed it. The project for auditing the books was defeated after it had received the approval of the committee of 21, 1 ask now why was that project defeated? This plan I suggest is a business proposition and it must be met."

The speaker then denied that he had ever said or insinuated that any other man than Swan had had a hand in the stealing of the town funds, and he would emphatically say that he did not believe there was anyone else concerned in it. "But," said he, "what are you going to do after what Swan's counsel has said? Are you willing the statement that two-thirds of the town's money is in other men's hands to go unrebuked? The judge dignifies the statement by saying he cannot take that statement into consideration. Talk about a higher rate. Can't you risk any more money for a complete examination? We could have paid for a skilled auditor for many years from the stealings of the convicted man. paid for a skilled auditor for many years from the stealings of the convicted man. You now find you are $30,000 out and God only knows where it will end. This is not the first defalcation in the town which has been smoothed over and hushed up. Now where are you going to stop? Are you going to be led by false prophets to financial ruin, or will you start anew and see who can run the town? "There are two kinds of responsibility, criminal responsibility and moral responsibility. If Swan is not guilty of all the stealings, what inducement was held criminal responsibility and moral responsibility. If Swan is not guilty of all the stealings, what inducement was held out to him to plead guilty to all? The men who are morally responsible are the men of the town who for seven years or less have permitted a bankrupt or worse to handle the town money without one cent of bonds. Isn't that a sweeping condemnation of the business methods of the town? What one of you would do so in your own affairs? Who in the possession of his faculties allowed that man (Swan) to handle the money without bonds? He could live as he did or $1000 a year, but he then would spend all the had. But when a man like that is engaged in speculating it might be a good idea to bond him. But lo, I was told that a member of the board of selectmen had chided him for advertising himself as assistant treasurer of the town of Arlington." The man under me robbed the company for which I am employed, would I be the one to make the investigation? Well, I guess not. The moral responsibility rests with those who have nandled this thing for years, and who have allowed this young man to be tempted beyond reason without a particle of bonds." He then asked who was to take care of the poor taxpayer who had lost his receipts, and said the motion to refer the matter to the committee of 21 was an attempt to smuggle the matter, and he hoped nothing would be done in conformity with the "board of strategy." Selectman E. S. Farmer said the report of the selectmen was made out by the selectmen and by the town attorney, and no member of the board of strategy, whatever that was, had anything to de

He said the men who had paid their taxes would not be required to pay a second time. He could see no need in going to a useless expense of another investigation and re-threshing it all over, causing hard feelings and ill will. Rev. John M. Rev. John M. Mulcahy said, as a business man as well as a clergyman, he thought the matter should be discussed at length. He said that he did not believe that other town officials had realized the other $20,000 as intimated by Swan's counsel, but that Mr. Tuttle's suggestion, that said counsel was speaking under a stress of circumstances, would not hold water, and there were yet many things on which light has not been thrown by the selectmen's report. The report also gave the amount of funds taken by Swan and not entered on the town's books, but gave no information in regard to who was responsible for a man under no bonds performing the duties of the town treasurer. duties of the town treasurer.

Mr. Peck's motion to refer the matter o the committee of 21 was then over-whelmingly defeated. Mr. Scannell then offered his original

Mr. Scannell then offered his original motion, which was carried by a very large majority. The motion was to the effect that a committee of five citizens be appointed to investigate the recent defalcation from the town treasury, the past and present condition of the treasury, the causes leading up to the recent steal, to place the responsibility therefor, and to report any and all measures they may deem fit to prevent a recurrence of such an affair.

Scannell, Howard W. Spurr, William N. Winn, George G. Allen and Horace A. Phinney. The sum of $1000 was appropriated to defray the expense of the investigation. This committee was also authorized to consider the method of reorganization of the clerical force of the town as suggested by a report now before the town, and to report their findings at the next town meeting or at a meeting to be called by them in the meantime.

EIGHT DEFEATS ELEVEN.

The Arlington Cutter school defeated the Cunard Athletic club at football, Wednesday afternoon, on Lawrence field, by a score of 12 to 10. The victors were handicapped by having but eight players on their side, three of the regular team being laid up from the effects of former victories. Of this number, Lucius Banks, the full back, was severely missed. The playing of Austin for the Cutter school at half back was very fine. The line up was: Cutter—McArdle, c.; McCarthy, r. g.; Stingel, l. g.; Roden, l. e.; Spear, r. e.; Schwamb, q. b.; Kelly, h. b. "Lovers' Lane." which is entering upon its second month, continues to draw enormous audiences and the cosy house nightly rings with merriment and applause. Previous engagements will prevent this delightful play from remaining very much longer, but before it is withdrawn it will have exceeded the time originally assigned it The popular verdict approving Wm. A. Brady's delightful offering is thoroughly justified, for it is a sweet, wholesome, fascinating love story blending with dramatic incidents at times pathetic and at times farcical. The young New England clergyman is a forceful and manly figure. After winning his fight for the new religion of love toward humanity, he finds that in reaching out he has caught within his arms that personal love which he had thought far beyond him. "Lovers' Lane." in brief, is a most realistic and fascinating series of episodes in a Massachusetts village, with much love-making, much homely sentiment and many situations that convulse an audience with laughter. As for the acting, the very superlatives of praise should be bestowed upon the clever people who fill nearly thirty strongly defined character parts. The scenery is so good that it almost makes one forget that it is scenery. The views of the apple orchard give an excellent impression of distance and rolling hills. The trees with their real leaves and real apples are perfect in realism, "Lovers' Lane" is not a long lane, and one can get through its four turns in ample time for the suburban trains. An evening stroll there will be found delightful. Seats are selling rapidly for the Thanksgiving performances, which include a special holiday matinee.

TELL THE TRUTH.

The attempt to deceive the people of Lexington relative to the hearing to be held Monday on the proposed plan of widening the avenue in East Lexington has begun to have an opposite effect from what was intended. Many citizens of the town who had entertained an honest disapproval of the plan of double tracks for the street railway are disgusted at the manner in which their case has been handled because of the flagrant misstatement of facts, and the feelings of those who have been innocently duped and have just learned of it can scarcely be imagined. Even the terms of the franchise, recently granted the Lexington & Boston Street Railway company by the selectmen, have, as will be seen in another column, been quoted only in part, and the people have been informed that the section quoted was "the only one" which had to do with the question under discussion. No mention has been made of another section in the franchise which prohibits the laying of any tracks by the company until all the conditions of the franchise, including the payment of land damages to abutters, have been complied with. Why has not this section been quoted instead of its existence denied? Can the opposition to the double tracks hope to win before the commissioners by such tactics, and will they dare use the same argument at the hearing? One other argument which has been used until its absurdity was too apparent was the increased danger to the travelling public with the proposed double track and catastrophes have been pictured of two cars meeting while going at a terrific rate. In many towns the double track is demanded to prevent just such a catastrophe, and in fact the illustration again serves as a weapon which kicks further than it The Arlington collision is sugshoots. gested as a horrible example, but it will be remembered that collision occurred on the only strip of single track within the borders of the town, and would never have happened had there been two tracks instead of one. The Enterprise sincerely hopes there will be a full attendance at the hearing Monday morning at 10 o'clock in the selectmen's room, and above all it hopes the speakers on that occasion will tell the truth.

Some of the opponents of double tracks intend to make a square fight Monday, and will discuss the proposition of avenue widening on its merits. That is the proper spirit and will dignify the cause which has been injured by the tactics of their over-zealous friends.

The Enterprise is "the only one" to give the people the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth about the double track franchise question.

The Lexington board of selectmen has the interests of the town at heart and knows what it is about.

When you read the terms of the franchise, don't stop after section 4, thinking it is "the only one."

'The only one' has several brothers.

Tell the truth.

It was an especially attractive one and the table decorations in chrysantheand the table decorations in chrysanthemums were beautiful. The entertainment following, which was in charge of Mrs. Ferguson, was very interesting. The program opened with some musical numbers, all of which were rendered by out-of-town friends of Mrs. Ferguson, with the exception of a solo in German, by Byam Hollings. Following them came some fine charades, illustrating the names of different well known composers. "Mozart" was the title of a charade, guessed by Miss Margaret Wiswell, who was presented with a large bunch of celery as a reward. Two of Miss Stratton's excellent dramatic readings completed the program, for which Mrs. Ferguson deserves much credit.

Lexington's Water Supply Saved by Generous Offer.

Pure Water Being Forced Into Town Mains by Lexington & Boston Street Is Increasing. Railway Company's Pumps - Work Done Free of Expense to the Town.

Lexington has escaped an impending water famine by the generous action of the Lexington & Boston Street Railway water famine by the generous action of the Lexington & Boston Street Railway company, It is now believed the danger is over, for the railway people gave orders last night to its men to connect the company's water supply with the town mains and at an early hour this morning the pumps at the power station were pumping water from its own wells into the town pipes. Water in the reservoir is at a very low obb, and it was feared the town would be without water for fire or domestic uses. The gauge in the town hall which registered a pressure of 40 pounds. Thursday morning has since been reduced to nothing, and Supt. Bruce has engaged men to dig a trench in the reservoir to collect all the water which is available and convey it to the pipe. Soundings were taken Sunday, and the average depth in the reservoir was less than two feet, and since that time there has been a steady decrease. But four pounds of pressure was registered last evening. When Supt. Greene, of the L. & B., learned of the impending disaster, he had an interview with Supt. Bruce, of the water works. Mr. Greene offered the free use of the pumps at the power station and all the water needed from the wells nearby. This offer was at once accepted and the pipes were connected. The water is as pure as could be desired, and the quantity is sufficient for fire and domestic purposes. A considerable saving of expense has been made by the deal, for the present plan costs nothing, while any other scheme, providing one could have been hit upon, would have been very expensive.

MUSIC HALL.

There will be two capital bicycle acts at Boston Music Hall next week, and they will be as different from each other as black is from white. The one will be the race on "home trainers," between Harry Elkes and Tom Butler, the two world-famous riders, who have created a genuine furore at this theatre this week, and the other will be contributed by Hacker and Lester, two of the best trick and comedy bicyclists in the profession. Another will be the novelty to be introduced by a sextette of pretty vocalists, who will open with a picturesque Japanese excerpt suggestive of a scene from "The Geisha" or "San Toy," and leading up to other ensemble numbers, closing with a rattling medley. An artiste who is talented to her finger tips is Lillie Western, the finest xylophone soloist of the gentler sex, and a brilliant performer on the bells and snare drum. Miss Western is a great favorite at this theatre. Others will be M. Torcat, the inimitable grotesque comedian, whose drollery is typically Gallic and whose methods are original to a degree; M. Cadieux, a daring tight wire performer who accomplishes wonderful feats in mid-air; Herbert and Willing, two clever black-face singers and dancers; Charlie Welch, a unique monologist; the Raschetta brothers, two neat barrel jumpers; the Ramsdells, fascinating toe jumpers; Edward Estus, the celebrated equilibrist; and the vitagraph, which always accompanies a Boston Music Hall entertainment

BIJOU OPERA HOUSE.

BIJOL OPERA HOUSE.

At the Bijou Opera House, Boston, the operas presented by the permanent stock company are meeting with unqualified success. The ever popular opera of "Carmen" will be presented next week, with the following persons in the leading roles: Michaelis, alternating Miss Lane and Miss Ladd; Mercedes, Miss Knight; Frasquita, Miss Thorne; Don Jose, alternating Mr. Tallman and Mr. Wheatley; Esquamilla, Mr. Murray; Dancario, Mr. Shields; Remandado, Mr. McCaffrey; Zuminga, Mr. Reed.

PROGRESS AND IMPROVEMENT. PROGRESS AND IMPROVEMENT.

Another great improvement at Larrabee's Temple place and West street stores. For two weeks mechanics have been working night and day constructing an elegant, new, modern, up-to-date front, and making other great improvements in their Temple place section. The public cannot fail to admire and appreciate this last and great improvement, as their comfort and convenience have been carefully considered. Next week, commencing Monday extraordinary bargains will be offered in all of their twenty departments, and it is needless to add that Larrabee's stores will be a busy place next week.

If your coat sags at the shoulder, and makes you look like a sack of meal, it is a sure sign hat it was not made by P. J. Stevens, the custom tailor. All his work bears the stamp of the truly artistic tailor: he uses the best materials, and, best of all, his prices are moderate. A good looking man can be made to look like a countryman from "way-back," simply by his having a poor haircut. To look your best you must have your hair cut in a manner to conform with the shape of your head. J. J. Toomey, the hair-dresser in Hunt's block, has the art down fine. Give him a call.

The necessities of life in the shape of groceries are coming into your house every day. Are you getting the best? Better see what C. A. Butters, of the postoffice block, has to offer. He can please the most familious. This store has been in business 37 years, and expects to stay 37 years longer. Honest goods at honest prices will accomplish this, and Mr. Butters makes a specialty of just this sort of thing. Prove this statement by giving him your trade.

Belmont and Waverley

At the Waverley Unitarian church, instead of the subject which he had intended, Mr. Allen spoke last Sunday on the subject of a fortnight ago, "Overcoming evil with good." He referred to the story of Joseph receiving his brethren in Egypt and teaching them generously and lovingly, though they had once tried to kill him, as a striking case of magnanimity, which must have made better men of them. Merely restraining evil by prison walls or severe pains does not really overcome it. The drunkard's appetite remains, even though he is shut up in jail. But restraint and pain prepare the way, and in this sense evil must be broken up by the heavy, sharp ploughshare before the rains can penetrate and fertilize the soil. The slave power, forty years ago, had to be met by the calamities of war, before it would yield to the principles of a higher civilization. Sin is selfishness, and it is really overcome only when it is transformed into unselfishness, and this can be done by love alone. In every soul there is some spark of good, some reverence for an ideal, some feeling of the authority of right; and this spark may be kindled into a flame if we can deal with it lovingly enough. If we fail, it is because we lack love. The bar of iron which the kitchen fire does not melt is easily melted in the foundry fire. How shall we obtain this mighty love? The universe is full of it, just as it is full of electricity, though usually we perceive neither; but God provides ways by which we can bring this electricity to our help, till it transforms our civilization. And so God reveals his all-conquering love in the life of Jesus and all Christ-like lives, till it sometime will flood the world. Mr. Allen's subject next Sunday will be, "Cheerfulness in religion and in life."

R. W. Rogers was awarded $1000 land damages by Judge Lawton, this week, on an appeal to the supreme court from an award of $600 allowed by the commissioners of Middlesex county as damages caused by the widening of Belmont street, for the Waverley car line. The Rogers land is located at the corner of Belmont and Prentiss streets, and the petitioner claimed that he was forced to move his buildings, and that the grade of Belmont street was changed, greatly damaging his whole property.

FOLLEN CH! 'H

Rev. L. D. Cochrane preached Sunday morning, taking his text from Mark 10: 44-46, his subject being "The Life of Ser-vice." He said: Christ came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. To be it-to, his subject being "The Life of Service." He said: Christ came mot to be ministered unto, but to minister. To be like Him, we must be a servant of others. A life of service is necessary to become a Christian. We must be unselfish even as our Heavenly Father is unselfish in His treatment of us. The real service itself is the essence of religion. The unselfish man is the man with a large soul. We can always find some way to help those around us. This is the Christ way of life. He that would be first among you, let him be servant of all. When we help others we are helping ourselves. Do the best that is in you and you will get the best in return. This is the religion which is wanted now. The great tung in the world is service. Service is another name for God.

The Y. P. guild service in the evening was conducted by Miss Florence Kauffmann, who read a well prepared and very comprehensive paper on the county of the Ideal." There were readings by several others and remarks by the pastor. In addition to the regular music, Miss E. Corinne Locke sang "The Lost Chord," with organ accompaniment by Miss Anna M. "That's 'im," said several voices. "Dark 'air-almost black, big brown eyes, two pretty rows of teeth, 'ight about 5 foot 4," continued the stranger, gazing abstractedly into the cloud of smoke he blew from his lips. "That's 'er," came from the company

'Man and wife," said the stranger. "Wot!" shouted the landlord. "Do you know 'em?"

"I do that!" replied the other sorrow-

"'Ow?" came from a dozen voices. "Well, you see, they came to my village about six months back and played a very similar trick upon a friend of mine—a very near and dear friend of mine," said the stranger. "'Imself, I'll bet!" whispered Ben Tipper, and the company filed silently out of the bar, out of respect for the stranger's evident grief. - Penny Pictorial Maga-

The Owl In Poetry.

Much unnatural history has been written of the owls, and unfortunately most people have their ideas of them from the poets. The owl is not moping, nor mourning, nor melancholy, neither is he dolor-ous nor mournful. He is neither grave monk, nor anchorite, nor pillared saint. Poets write by day and owls fly by night, and doubtless Mr. Gray and his school have their opinion of owls from staring at stuffed specimens in glass cases, or at the birds of wisdom surprised in the full light of day, when they will be seen blinking, egling, nodding and hissing at each other, very unlike representatives of Minerva.

Christopher North is the only author who has done justice to the owls, or justice to the poets, for the matter of that, by his denunciation of their epithets and false images. He knew well that the white owl never mopes, but holds its revels through the livelong night, when all else is hushed and still.-Cornhill Maga-

Success of One Piece of Music. Very few know anything about Suppe, the composer of "Fatinitza" and several other popular operas and the father of the "Poet and Peasant" overture. The latter was composed to an entirely differ-ent piece and fell flat; the author then tried it at intervals of six months and a year with two other plays, and no one found it pretty. Lastly, because there was not time to write a new overture, it was used with a long forgotten farce called "Poet and Peasant." The farce was successful, and people endured the overture. Then somebody asked permission to publish it in a journal, arranged

MALARIA CARRIERS.

The Marsh Lands of Arlington and Belmont Are Breeding Grounds for Poisonous Mosquitoes.

It is said on good authority that the malaria-carrying mosquito of the genus Anopheles, has been discovered to abound in large numbers in the swamp lands in the towns of Arlington, Belmont and Somerville, known as the rresh pond marshes." To W. Lyman Underwood, member of the Belmont board of health, is due the credit for discovering the presence of this pest in board of health, is due the credit for discovering the presence of this pest in our immediate vicinity. This is the same species that has caused so much trouble in Cuba, Italy and elsewhere, in carrying the germs of malaria. His modus operandi is to tap a person afflicted with malaria, and then transplant the germs to healthy cuticle elsewhere, thereby spreading the disease, which in tropical and semi-tropical countries proves fatal in many cases. These marshes are also prolific breeding marshes are also prollific breeding grounds for the ordinary mosquito, of the genus Culex, which, while not being charged with the sin of carrying disease, is withal an unmitigated nuisance.

The total area of these marshes has been estimated by City Engineer Hastings to be about 700 acres, while another and more conservative authority places he figures at about 500 acres. To abate his evil there must be co-operation on this evil there must be co-operation on the part of the towns in this sec-tion. Of course it is generally under-stood that stagnant water is the cause of all the trouble, in that it furnishes breeding places for the mosquitoes. Arlington and Somerville have so far done nothing in the matter, the former on its southeastern border, which lies adjacent to a ³⁰ or 100 core area of dead

Belmont and Cambridge have co-operated and expended some $1700 in improving the condition of the Wellington brook section in the neighborhood of Hill's Crossing. This has lowered the standing water 40 inches in that locality. Cambridge's portion of this expense was about $1200. The importance of an early attention being given to this matter is emphasized by a statement made in August, last year, at a hearing before the Cambridge board of health, by a Cambridge physician, who stated that he then had from 100 to 125 patients in the vicinity of these marshes, who were suffering from malaria.

..... MARGARET NEW ORLEANS

AN IDEAL CHARITY REALIZED. 644444444444444444444444

"I wonder if it idealizes her?" We stand beside the statue of this famous woman, Margaret of New Orleans, and, after the manner of strangers, conjecture on what we for the first time see. "Not at all," a voice answers in the soft southern tongue. "It looks just like "Ah, thank you. You live here?

"I was born here. This is my home." "You were here during the war and yellow fever and everything? And was Ben Butler so dreadful? And have you seen Cable?"

A nod answers each one of my young companion's impetuous queries.
"How delightful!" concludes my friend, but the lady shakes her head and taps her fan lightly on the girl's soft cheek and says musingly: "It did not seem as if I would live through it, but I have, and now comes one who calls my trials 'delightful.' How cruel!" "Ah, pardon! But I was thinking of that charming man who wrote the deli-cious 'Mme. Delphine.' I was thinking how perfectly lovely it must be to live here and know him-and then to live in a city that has had such a history-it is so romantic. And can you tell us anything about Margaret?" "This little space-'Margaret place,' it is called-it is a pleasant spot to rest in. With this invitation, given more in looks than in words, we seated ourselves near our new acquaintance on the settees in the little park. The perfume of March roses overhaug the city; we forget in its deliciousness the signs of decay that in portions of that quaint old town imparts a pensive melancholy to its beauty. Near by us in the green grass is a pool set about with a low border of cactus; a mimic fort, with all its bristling thorn guns out, and its blossom floating from the ramparts, which are guarding from such fierceness only a lazy fleet of water lilies, under the shade of which there is a whirl of goldfish. A stone footbridge crosses the pool and spans the river of cactuses. It is a very odd and tasteful device, this pool, and the little park in which it is placed is unique in its way. There is nothing overdone, neither neglected. It is a well kept, refreshing, simple setting for the statue itself.

"She was a working woman-a servant When I first remember her I was living near here, and she was taking care of the cows in a stable that stood almost on the very spot where her statue stands now. She was working then for the sisters of the asylum. She fed and milked their cows and sold milk in a cart about the city. She was a strange looking person -remarkable in her appearance. I think now as I recall her she had a broad forehead, serious eyes, a pleasant, broad smile, a rather short, stout figure. I do not suppose she ever in her life wore any dress better than a guinea blue calico; she always wore heavy shoes and a black straw bonnet trimmed with a neat band of black over the top. From my residence I could see her many times a day while she was at her stable work or coming back and forth with her milk cans.

"What was ber name? Her name was Margaret Hauggery; she had been married and at that time was a widow. Her husband and little child died just after she came to New Orleans; so we learned after she became famous. She was alone and poor in a strange country and went to work in the stables for a living. Somehow everybody liked Margaret; her smile was sweet and her words shrewd. The children called her Margaret, and she knew their names and answered their salutations along the street as she drove by in the milk cart.

"After some years Margaret had saved enough to buy a bit of ground that had on it a small bakery. The place was sold for a trifle, but now Margaret was in royal trim-a landowner and a manufacturer; for she opened the shop and began bread and pie making for the neighbors. Presently there was a large bakery built soon bread carts were running over the city bearing the words 'Margaret's Bakery.' It became the fashion to buy at Margaret's place. During war, pestilence and disaster Margaret's fires were never out, and the delicious rolls kept up their weight and quality, no matter what else in life failed. Then she began running her free bread carts during the fever panic. No one went hungry who was within sound of her cart wheels. From that time on no one need go hungry in New Orleans-those too poor to buy were given a loaf fresh and white as the best, and it was given heartily, with a 'God bring thee better times!' There was no distinction in Margaret's favors. She gave to white and black, of any church or none. 'Are you hungry?' that is all that was necessary. 'Here is bread; take it with God's blessing.' There have been in this city dread days, which seemed as if God and everybody had failed us but Margaret; days when she almost literally fed the city. During the yellow fever panic Margaret began her noble work of taking the children from the homes of death and putting them into a house under good care, supporting them herself in every particular. Soon the one asylum grew into many; the dozens of her little charges were numbered by hundreds-and at the time of her death thousands. At the gate of every orphan asylum in the city Margaret's bread cart, with its smoking rolls, was seen daily; at every charitable institution whatsoever she took the privilege of giving her bread freely, and Margaret's name headed the list for every charity.

"Our grand Charity hospital, one of the most famous in the world, was largely the gift of Margaret. You must visit that hospital. It will make you better all your life for having seen it. Right through the trees there, at the right, do you see that magnificent building with its four galleries running around the first four stories of the house? Its gate tells in golden letters that this is a children's home, given by Margaret, where to the end of time orphans will be cared for and educated by her bequests. Many of our cemeteries contain in form of handsome tombs Margaret's simple but munificent thoughtfulness. Here you know all are buried above ground in crypts or ovens of masonry, and when you visit our ceme teries—as strangers always do, for there are no burial places like these in America you will see stone tombs, containing one, two or four dozen bodies maybe, inscribed, 'Given to the Little Sisters of the Poor by Margaret.' 'The Strangers' Tomb, Given by Margaret.' I suppose Margaret spent more money for the city than the richest man in the history of the state, and of the sympathy and discern ment of the needs of the poor the half could never be told. She spent nothing on herself. A clean blue calico, stout shoes, a black straw bonnet, a knitted jacket or shoulder shawl, an iron bedstead in a room without even a rocking chair and overlooking the bakeshop, sufficed for her. She had no time to enjoy real luxuries. As long as there was a weeping child or a friendless woman in the city what time had she to fold her arms in a rocking chair? While there were unburied, coffinless forms could she adorn her home of the living? And so it happened that to the end of life Margaret spent neither time, care nor money on herself. She forget there was such a mortal as Margaret.

"And when one day the news went around that Margaret was dead the great city arose and put on mourning; the business houses were closed; all the employments of the city stood still. The day of the burial thousands of her little orphans followed her bier as mourners; every church sent delegations of honor bearers; the public school children joined in the throng; the houses were draped along the line of march; all the bells in the city tolled; civic and military joined in the procession with ecclesiastics; there never was here a funeral like Margaret's.

"Afterward it was found that her po sessions had been so disposed that had death come at any moment the affairs of this life were well and intelligently wound up. There were no personal effects of value, but even her few garments she left to the poor, and with the proceeds of her wise investments her charities are royally endowed.

"This statue is the gift of the city, to show in this public way the esteem in which she is held. It is very like Margaret. The motherly figure, seated with one arm encircling a standing child at her side; the untrimmed dress, coarse shoes, the little crocheted shawl about her shoulders are homely, but who would change them for finer clothing? The smooth hair, with its old fashioned French smooth hair, with its old fashioned French parting; the strong chin, the pleasant mouth, the serious eyes-is there not something fascinating in the contradictions of the face?

"Did you ever see such a head on a woman's shoulders? Massive, wonderful! That is the head of a statesman and financier, while its mouth, with its pleasant smile, telling of the tact and natural suavity of Margaret's character, proclaims the elements of a born diplomat. Yet, look again at the broad, massive brow, and see the earnest, loving eye that speaks of a true womanhood; look once more at the coarse garments and you will see that poverty added her load to the ordinary burden of womanhood, while ignorance, bereavement, affliction, loneliness join hands with poverty against this soul. But the massive brow conquered, the untaught brain triumphed, and under the leadership of the sad, gentle eyes gave to the suffering what might, had she been a man born in other circumstances, have been the gain of nations and the glitter of the trapping of a diplomat.

"When I consider what Margaret did for one city under such desperate disadvantages. I wonder what she could have done for the world if all the environments had been right. I was thinking of that as I looked, in passing for the hundredth time, at the strong, fascinating face this morning, when your question met my ear. "Yes, it lock's like her, and there will

Sir Charles Locock, who was the physician attending Queen Victoria at a certain period of her reign, was once commanded by her majesty to proceed to Berlin and report on the condition of her daughter, the crown princess. On the return trip, stopping at Dover for a hasty luncheon, he was enabled to snatch

Then he resigned himself to the deep sleep that came upon him. He did not wake until the train had pulled into the London station, and, still dazed by his slumber, he jumped into a carriage and was driven home. The grins of the servants and the exclamation of his wife were followed by the inquiry from one of the children, "Oh, papa, what have you got in your hat?"

Then he remembered his experience on the train. Taking off his hat, he removed the large white paper on which he had scribbled this petition to the general pub-

Old Mailbox.

Among the treasures held by the Antiquarian society in Portsmouth, N. H., there is an old box the history of which is given on a label which it bears. The box is of tin, painted green, and shows signs of much usage, which is not surprising when one considers that it carried the United States mail between Portsmouth and Boston during the Revolution. It is about 9 inches long, 41/2 inches wide and a little more than that in height. It was carried on horseback by Captain

John Noble, otherwise known as Deacon Noble, who was post rider until 1783. This box contained all the mail and made every week one round trip, occupying three days in the journey-from Portsmouth to Boston the first of the week and three days at the end of the week from Boston to Portsmouth. The distance be tween the two places is a little more than fifty miles. How Things Usually Come.

"Do you believe that all things come to him who waits?" "No," answered the hustler decisively. "Pretty nearly everything that a man doesn't want comes to him who waits, but the things worth having come to him who gets up and humps himself."-Chi-

LESSON VIII, FOURTH QUARTER, INTER-NATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 24.

Text of the Lesson, Isa. v, 8-30-Memory Verses, 11, 12-Golden Text, Isa. v, 22-Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1901, by American Press Association.] Since the serpent persuaded man to believe that he was wiser than God the majority of people have walked in that way -that is, in their own wisdom, in their own way, the way of selfishness, self seeking, self righteousness, seif glorification and renunciation of God. It is not strange that the world, lying in the wicked one (I John v, 19, R. V.), should do this, but it does seem strange that the professing people of God, who are called in this chapter His vineyard and His people (verses 4, 7, 13, 25), should so dishonor God. Those who would find only a so called temperance lesson in this chapter are something like those who find nothing in all the Bible but how to be saved. The book is called "The vision of Isaiah concerning Judah and Jerusalem" (chapter i, 1), and therefore the first application of its words must be to them. The summit of the whole book is seen in such passages as verse 16 of our lesson, chapter ii, 11, 17, and similar passages, "The Lord alone shall be exalted."

1-7. This passage shows His special care of Israel and how instead of good fruit to His glory they gave Him only wild grapes and unrighteousness instead of righteousness. The same story of base ingratitude is set forth in our Lord's parable of the wicked husbandmen in Math.

8-10. That which is here set forth as joining house to house and field to field that they may be in some sense the only people on earth is very manifest today in the so called "trusts" which have become so prominent in these last days. It would be well if none who bear the name of Christ were mixed up with these things. The Lord of Hosts hears and sees it all and His complaint in Hag. i, 9, is still the same. The remedy is in Math. vi, 33. 11-12. From morning until night it is naught but self indulgence, and in chapter xxviii, 7, it is written that the priest and the prophet, those who should be wholly for man before God and for God before man, have erred through strong drink and are swallowed up of wine. Our verses say that they regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of His hands. The same statement is found in Ps. xxviii, 5. and the result stated "He shall destroy them and not build them up." If the adversary can only turn men from the word of God and thus from God Himself, he has accomplished much in his line.

13-17. A worse bondage than that of Egypt and a worse famine than that which affects only the body comes upon them, "not a famine of bread nor a thirst water, but of hearing the words of the Lord" (Amos viii, 11, 12). A terrible humiliation must come, for the Lord of hosts shall be exalted in judgment and the Holy God be sanctified in righteousness (verse 16, margin). The kingdom of God shall come, and all iniquity shall be put away (Dan. ix, 24) not only in Israel, but in all the world. Happy are all who have a foretaste of the kingdom in their hearts and lives now.

18, 19. Iniquity takes such a strong hold upon some that they actually mock God and dare Him to do His utmost Like the antediluvians they say: "What doth God know? What can the Almighty do to them?" (Job xxii, 13, 17, margin.) They say, "Where is the promise of His coming?" All things continue as they were. Because they will not believe God they are willingly ignorant of what has been and what will be (II Pet. iii, 3-7). These are not drunken with wine, but with their own 45 cor. pride and self conceit and unbelief.

V., there is no morning for such people—that is, the morning of joy, of His coming, of the kingdom, will mean nothing to them (Ps. xlix, 14; xxx, 5; cxxx, 6), for they will have only the blackness of darkness forever. We do not know that the rich man of Luke xvi was ever given to strong drink, but he was drunken with his own thoughts and possessions, and he died and found himself in torment.

26, 30. This is a look onward to the gathering of all nations that He may by them humiliate Israel and then judge the nations and deliver Israel and establish His kingdom on the earth. Compare carefully Joel iii, 1, 2, 15-17; Zeph. iii, 8-20; also Isa. iv, 2-6; vi, 3, margin; Isa. xiii, 9-13, "The Lord of Hosts hath purposed it to stain the pride of all glory and to bring into contempt all the honor-able of the earth" (Isa. xxiii, 9). The kingdom will come, but the unrighteous shall not see it. No drunkard nor sinner of any other kind, continuing in sin and dying in the same, can ever inherit the kingdome but every drunkard, liar, murderer or ordinary sinner who with true penitence turns from his sin to the only

A DOUBLE EVENT

A Story of Two People Struggling For Literary Fame.

By AMELIA PAIN.

The first letter fell out of a blue sky,

signed "John Giddens," on to unprepared soil, addressed as "E. F. Cornish, Esq., Care of the Editor," and ran as follows: Dear Sir-1 have just read your story, "The Carbuncle." May I refer you to a sketch of mine, entitled "The Ruby" and published in Stoner's Magazine for April last? I am naturally much flattered at being found worthy of imita-tion—an imitation so frank and obvious as to leave no room for question of chance or coincidence. At the same time, as I hope some day to republish my story in book form, I should consider it both honest and courteous on your part if you would insert in the next number of magazine an acknowledgment that your story was founded on mine. I am, of course, only a beginner in the field of literature, but I had hoped that this need not absolve my colleagues from ordinary fair play. Faithfully yours,

JOHN GIDDENS The answer came three days later: Dear Sir-Your letter of the 4th has been forwarded to me. I had not read your story, "The Ruby," until this morning. I had never, as it happens, heard of it or seen Stoner's Magazine for April last. Of course I cannot prove statement. I can and do here swear to the truth of it, but am aware that it still rests with you to believe or disbelieve it and that disbelief is the more probable. The resemblance between the two stories is extraordinary. It is a most amazing coincidence, nothing more. Faithfully yours, E. F. CORNISH.

John Giddens immediately wrote again, declaring himself perfectly satisfied with the explanation, apologizing for his indignation and flippantly suggesting that in future they should revise each other's proofs to avoid further risks.

Will you accept the small volume which I send herewith as a peace offering? It is my first attempt at a novel, just published. My excuses must be (1) that it is short; (2) that I naturally have a feeling of fellowship with the author of "The Carbuncle," and (3) that-with the above notable exception—I so genuinely admire your work and would value your criticism accordingly The qualities which I enjoy most in your writing—the extreme delicacy and subtlety—have let me to guess that your masculine title is assumed. If I am mistaken, it will be my first error in judging the sex of a writer, and I should be apol-JOHN GIDDENS.

E. F. Cornish allowed the lapse of a week before returning thanks for the book. "I waited to read it, contrary to my gen eral rule," was the reason given, borne out by a most careful criticism and most un common praise. "The book has appealed to me more strongly perhaps than any other modern novel. I hardly dare or care to tell you tafter what has already passed between us) that the plot is almost identical with one which I have been secretly nursing in my mind for years. But so it is. It gave me the oddest sen-sation—as if my thoughts had somehow escaped my brain or had been stolen from me. I had a moment of senseless rage. And toward the end of the letter: "Of course you are right about my name and sex being assumed, but you are the first who has unmasked me. I trust to your discretion. I am sure that I safely may. There are reasons why this should be of importance to me. As to your feeling of fellowship, how should one not feel drawn toward an intellectual twin? I, for my part, am frankly curious to know more yourself as well as of your work. Will you let me? Remember that I know nothing of your personal history beyond your address, and that I am no less curious than the rest of my sex." Whereon John Giddens showed himself no less flatterable than the rest of his sex by replying with a long letter, delicately personal, a trifle sentimental in parts. but with high lights of humor that must have appealed particularly to E. F. Cornish, if sympathy in humor goes for anything. And of course there was a counter petition for personal information. is always a satisfaction," he ended, "in Massachusetts Ave., Opposite Post Office have vividly imagined. May I not see a portrait of you—a sketch, a photograph portrait of you—a sketch, a photograph -anything that can give me the faintest clew? I intend faithfully to return it. If you refuse, you must, of course, bear my inferences.

"I haven't got one photograph of my self that I would show to a stuffed cat,' answered E. F. Cornish, "but to stifle inferences I must tell you that there will be at least two portraits of me in next year's exhibitions (I am a victim of painters), and those you shall see and know. Tell me, meanwhile, what your imagination has painted me. Describe me. I will describe you by way of encouragement You are of medium beight. A trifle sal low. Short, brown beard, and, I think, grayish eyes. A sensitive mouth-almost femininely so-and very white hands. You are not strong, physically, and you are thin and stoop a little. You are emotional and a bad sleeper. There! Send exhaustive corrections and forgive-ness as soon as you like." A short and whinisical lament on the "abysmal difficulties" that beset the work of a young girl who is writing entirely in secret closed the letter.
"Dark," John Giddens painted her in his reply, "with straight brows and full lips, a strong, self reliant face and up-right figure. Large and rather restless eyes, with a bit of the devil in them. Age about twenty-five, but sometimes three. A little bit too wealthy for your own happiness as an artist, a little bit spoiled by worldly admiration. Heavens, how I shall tremble before your next letter!"

The next letter was already a certainty. From now they wrote constantly, letters that slipped gradually into intimacy, letters full of kindred humor, often frankly personal.

It was John Giddens who at last, after two months of this correspondence, approached the question of meeting, till then carefully avoided. "Why should we remain mere paper friends when fate so clearly intended more? Think of all we may be foregoing; or, better still, think not at all, but send me a simple, trustful

And she did send by return a colossal "Yes" that occupied the whole of the first page. On the second came instructions:
"Let it be at the British museum (for respectability) by the Elgin marbles (for inspiration) next Tuesday afternoon at 5 o'clock. And, to avoid assaulting the wrong people, let each wear a yellow orchid—I in my dress, you in your coat. Rob (of John Giddens' novel) has decided

Rob (of John Giddens' novel) has decided me. I was rereading last night, "Those whom a common humor hath joined together let no man put asunder."

Tuesday was a pouring wet day, but at five minutes to 5 a tall, gaunt woman, large footed, with a yellow orchid in her dress, entered the Elgin marble room, wiped some spots of rain off her gloves and cape, tweaked nervously at her veil and looked about her with furtive, short-sighted eyes that gleamed excitedly be hind her glasses. She must have been forty if a minute, but had the originality to face it squarely in her soberly expen sive garments, her unchallenging-almost apologetic--bonnet and her hygienic boots A certain broad humanity in the mouth and a decided glint of humor in the eye saved the face from downright ugliness or-well, nearly saved it.

At three minutes to 5 a young man or about twenty-two, very short, very fair and bloodless, with a stoop, and a yellow orchid in his buttonhole, entered the same room from the other side. ,He, too, looked about him with quick, light eyes, wherein a corresponding glint of humor fought with an impassive mouth. They did not appear to see one another at once, these two, although the roon held no more than its usual half dozer people. But they moved toward each other, from statue to statue, with slow casual steps, and a deep interest appar ently in the antique, till they met. they glanced hurriedly over one another and passed on in opposite directions Both continued this slow prowl round the room until they necessarily met again This time the woman stopped, fastened her shortsighted eyes on the man's but tonhole, and said with a rush, "I an John Giddens."

He looked fixedly at the orchid in he cape and said, "And I am E. F. Cornish." She held out her hand, their eyes me squarely, the glints struck and they stood there laughing hysterically, two il shaped, civilization soiled moderns among the cold glories of the ancients.

Questions and explanations followed in quick alternation. Why had John Gid dens masqueraded as a man in a private correspondence?

"Don't you see that I thought you were woman?" she explained frantically "Don't you see what a sublime situation I was going to bring about-to work up to the point of romance, almost of love and then meet bonnet to bonnet and watch the effect? Tableau! How 1 should have scored! And what a valua ble experience! To find out how another

-oh, it would have been perfect! But why you should pretend to be a woman! And E. F. Cornish had to explain how the idea, once given to him, had seemed irresistibly suggestive; how he, too, had determined to represent himself as a young and beautiful girl that he might wallow in the moment of disillusionment woman would really write to a man, and

'Again the same idea, you see," he ended But after one hour's talk, sitting face to face in that silent company, each had said and heard enough to realize that theirs was indeed an unprecedented in tellectual sympathy. It was extraordi No two friends of half a century's standing could have played better into each other's hands, taken each other's allusions with quicker grasp, enjoyed each other's utterances with more un jealous admiration.

It was almost unconsciously that she told him such fragments of her life as could interest him; how sheer boredom and social reaction had started her pen in middle life, and how her age and her wealth made her fearful of ridicule and determined her to conceal her identity.

And, equally unconsciously, he gave her glimpses of his lower middle class setting in Hampstead, his attacks of literary despair, his sister, who painted screens and bellows, his struggles against ill health.

Yes, there was the intellectual affinity in its finest flower-spontaneous, beautiful, urging eternal union. Only-there were likewise the facts of his twenty-two and her forty years, his 5 feet 4 and her 5 feet 11, his probable consumption and her certain mother; and, far above all, the fact of their common humor, illuminating all these and holding them to their tacit pact of mere friendship—a friendship which lasted them their time.-King.

The Spinning Machine of a Spider. The spinning machine is situated under the hinder part of the spider's body. It takes the form of a slight depression, which a close inspection shows to consist of six small bodies resembling tubes. Four of these contain an immense num ber of minute openings—as many as a ducked his head under the table like a thousand can be counted in each-and schoolboy. from every one of these openings a viscous fluid issues, which hardens on exposure to the atmosphere. The whole 4,000 threads are united into one line, which is sometimes so fine that 4,000,000 twisted together would not have a combined diameter greater than that of an ordinary hair from the human head. It is impossible to conceive the excessive slenderness of one of the 4,000 threads which compose such a line. The bare statement that each one has a thickness only one sixteen thousand millionth of that of a human hair does not in any way convey the impression of its won-derful fineness. The mind can no more grasp the meaning of such figures than it can understand the immense distance of which astronomers talk so glibly A Rocking Stone.

The rocking stone which stands on the flat surface of an outcropping of rock on a little eminence in Bronx park does not attract so much attention as the animals there do, by any means, but there are, nevertheless, always interested people walking around it and trying to see if they can move it. This great fragment of rock, which weighs perhaps eight or ten tons or more, has in its general outlines a form in some rough semblance to an egg. It lies on its side, and so nicely balanced is it that one man of fair strength can readily move it, and almost any two persons can start it into the rocking movement of which, through a small radius, it is susceptible. A woman comes up and lays her gloved hands upon it and presses gently; it doesn't budge. "Why, it doesn't move," she says. But two or three women together can set the great stone rocking easily. And no matter who it may be that sets the rocking stone in motion, he is pretty sure to find in setting it rocking a sort of fascination.—New York Sun.

Ida Bennett says in American Homes

that there is scarcely a plant in the gar den about which so many musty traditions exist as about the pansy. Chief of them, she says, is the tradition that it is a shade loving plant. Fifteen years' experience has convinced her that pansies ought to be grown in the sun, and also watered in the middle of the day. The essentials of success are a twice a day watering and the faithful going over the beds every day during the blooming sea-son and the removal of every faded flower. She lays special stress on the latter, saying the tipening of even one pod of seed materially shortens the plant's season of bloom. Of course during the very hot weather one may not expect panales, for, like other plants, they have their blooming season and take a rest after it.

A DINNER FOR FOUR.

DICKENS WAS THE GUEST AND THE BUTT OF THE PARTY.

The Author Compelled to Listen to Quotations From His "American Notes," Which His Entertainers All Carried In Their Pockets.

"I recollect a little dinner for four that was given in 1868 at the old Delmon place in Fourteenth street, New York," said one of the veterans among Washing-ton clubmen. "I was not a participant in that dinner, being not much more than a lad at the time, but with three other young chaps of my own age I watched and overheard the fun from a nearby table.

"Charles Dickens was the central figure in this feed for four. It was after he had made his second lecturing tour of the United States. You will recall how he ripped this country up the back in his 'American Notes,' published after he had made us his first visit in 1842 and how cheap he felt over that book for the remainder of his life. He felt particularly cheap when he came back to us in 1868. and we poured coals of fire upon his head by giving him a splendid reception. Hedeclared privately at that time that his 'American Notes' and the digs at the United States contained in 'Martin Chuzzlewit' had been 'the merest very youthful frothing at the mouth,' to employ his own words, and at a big dinner given to him by the newspaper men on his return to New York from his last lecturing tour he gallantly and, I believe, sincerely took back everything he had ever written about this country and made an especial arrangement with his publishers that the speech of apology which he made on this occasion should forever be included as an appendix to the 'American Notes' and 'Martin Churchlewit.' He found things very different here in 1868 from what he had found them in 1842, of course, but for all that there can be no doubt that Dickens was extremely sore upon himself for ever having held this country up to ridicule in the incisive, masterly but unjust manner with which he performed that job.

"Well, this little dinner for four that I started to tell you about was a purely informal affair, and it was given to Dickens by three famous New York wits-Lawrence Jerome, more affectionately known to his friends as Larry; the brilliant Charley Osborne and the finest wit. of a generation that is gone, William Travers, the raconteur. Dickens knew these three men well, and he was very fond of them all. He reveled in a little dinner like this. He was a heavy eater and a much heavier drinker, and he loved to sit around the right kind of a table surrounded by bright men until all hours.

"Jerome, Travers and Osborne quizzed and chaffed Dickens unmercifully from the moment that they sat down, and when the dinner was well under way they got together and hurled broadsides of good natured guying at the great novelist. Dickens took it all like a major. He could stand a guying better than any Englishman, great or little, that I ever met. Most of them are liable to get sore. and surly under such circumstances.

Dickens, figuratively speaking, placed both hands up and took it all in good parts and roared over their sallies with obvious enjoyment. They were attacking him about his 'American Notes.' This dinner took place not long after his apology for that book to the press folk, and so the three kney that they had him; that he had to take it as they gave it to him. "For instance, Dickens started to tells them what a delightful place he had found a certain western city to be. The stuttering Travers suddenly pulled a copy of 'American Notes' out of his pocket, ruffled over the leaves and found the page and began to read in his halting, song fashion the awful lambasting that Dickens had given that selfsame city in his book about the United States. Dickens hid his face with his napkin and then,

"After awhile, when Dickens probably thought the roasting was all over, be started in to tell them what a superb place Washington promised to be in the course of the next fifty years. He was becoming quite eloquent on this topic when Larry Jerome pulled out of his pocket his own copy of 'American Notes," brought along for the occasion, and began to read with an indescribably humorous drawl the extraordinary stuff that Dickens had written about the capital in 1842. Dickens shook his head sadly and made deprecatory gestures with his hands, but it was no use. Jerome went right on reading aloud the part in which Dickens declared Washington to be a sort of morass, a city of magnificent intentions in-stead of a city of magnificent distances, and so on, until the novelist bowed his head in his hand with pretended grief.

"The three chaffers all of a sudden became serious, and Dickens, who had a tendency to become grandiloquent as the wine went round, fell in with this mood of theirs, glad probably to believe that he was to be guyed no more. He drifted into some rather fine topic, I forget what it was, and in something less than no time he was discoursing like any Cicero or Demosthenes, while the three wits pretended to hang upon his utterances with open mouths.

"Then when Dickens had reached a sonorous period Charley Osborne suddenly reached into his coat pocket, pulled out his own private copy of 'American Notes,' turned to a page where the leaf was turned down, solemnly rose in his place and motioned for silence and began to read with a splendid mimicry of the voice and gestures of a tragedian from Dickens' description of the falls of Niagara. You will remember that while that's a pretty good piece of writing it's considerably overdone, as Dickens himself confessed afterward. It's high falutin', what you'd call 'dem'd fine writin'.'

"Well, the effect was very funny. Osborne and Travers and Jerome rumpled up their hair and pretended to be in ecstacies over the beauties of the description as poured forth in Osborne's de resonant bass, and they scowled horribly at Dickens when the novelist leaned back in his seat and howled with mirth. He-was purple from laughter.

"The four were still having a deuce of a time when Dickens' manager appeared and literally dragged the novelist to fulfill his lecturing engagement that evening."— Washington Star.

ARLINGTON LOCALS.

A reporter of the Enterprise struck a busy place when he called upon Alfred C. Cobb at his workshop in the high school building. Wednesday morning Mr. Cobb is in charge of the manual training department of the public schools. He was found Wednesday morning with thirty boys or thereabouts, working out very sort of cunning device. The boys were armed with saws, planes, augurs and so on, handling each and all of them with much dexterity. This department of manual training is an important trainch of study in our public schools. Indeed one of the mest important. Mr. Cobb is intensely practical in all his instruction.

UNION RALLY.

UNION RALLY.

The fall rally of the Middlesex Central mion of the Y. P. S. C. E. was held at the Pleasant Street Congregational church in Arlington, Wednesday aftermoon and evening The afternoon service began at 3.30 o'clock with a song service. The special theme was Junior work, with Miss Bessie Barker, of Malien the leader. A conference on Junior work was led by Mrs Sarah E. Eberman, Papers were read on "The Junior in the Home," "Mother's Place in the lanior Endeavor," and "Our Christian Endeavor Helpers." Following singing a Junior chorus, Mrs. Theresa Machonald read an interesting paper on "Th stelation of the Junior to the Senior Society and to the Church." This was followed by a general discussion. At 6 cyclick a supper was served, and the vening service began at 7 o'clock. The oralise service was led by Winslow Russell, followed by a devotional service. Then came the general topic, "A deep ming interest for service," and a paper on What is a growing society?" by Rev. H. McAllister: a paper on "In what we can the prayer meetings be made nore helpful and attractive?" Amos R. Wells, and a paper on "How can a single help the church in the largest and "Deater the paper on "How can a single help the church in the largest and "Deater the paper on "How can a single help the church in the largest and "Deater the paper on "How can a single help the church in the largest and "Deater the paper on "How can a single help the church in the largest and "Deater the paper on "How can a single help the church in the largest and "Deater the paper on "How can a single help the church in the largest and "Deater the paper on "How can a single help the church in the largest and "Deater the paper on "How can a single help the church in the largest and "Deater the paper on "How can a single help the church in the largest and "Deater the paper on "How can a single help the church in the largest and "Deater the paper on "How can a single help the church in the largest and "Deater the paper on "How can a single help the paper on "Ho

A Scrap on Among the Printers and a Challenge.

Division of Town Printing Causes Jealousy, Excites Unfriendly Criticism and Gets the Selectmen Rebuked.

Editor Enterprise: "Although the town has been victimized to a large amount, we beseeve citizens would witningly have paid a fair price to have had the detailed report of the treasury shortage prisected to the min fair-sized type, clearly printed, rather than proof of the sight saving to the treasury the form in wince it was presented accomplished. The matter is all there, but the type is too small for comfortable reading, even if it had been well printed."

The foregoing unpunctuated extract from hose week's Advocate, which saviors largely of sour grapes, is a trank and oper acknowledgment that the Advocate's sore spot was touched when a period, of the public printing was directed our way unsolicited save by the superior quality of all work turned out by the Enterprise Print."

Obviously enough it was calculated more to preliable public opinion against the work of "The Enterprise Print." than as a censure to the selection, for the form and size the report was presented in The point is not we trace, because it in the Advocate, and larger than the Life halfs in the Advocate the same people are supposed to read. If the majority of the citizens could not find the scheduling," Mey probably do not waste much time ruining their eyesight by theoroughly reading the Advocate. Cadvertisers take noticen.

As the productions of "The Enterprise Finit stand solely apon merit misupported by newspaper puffs-for it is the princy of the Enterprise to render justice to all, patrons of "The Enterprise Frint" or not, and to "rip no one up the Lack" for having his printing done elsewhere—it fears nothing from this patiful and selfish "cry-paby" wail, but to the contrary thanks the Advocate for the acknowledgment that there is another printing office on earth. Even if the circulation of the Advocate was sufficiently large that the article would have been read by a considerable number of citizens, "The Enterprise Print" would have no cause for alarm at losing its share of public printing.

It is so easy for the reader to discern the utter's lishness and denial of the rights of the Enterprise and "The Enterprise Print" to exist that has actuated the paragraph that it does not behoove us at this time to make furth remment, but we cannot let the "siur" go unchallenged. The work in question was not supposed to be an equiton delike with gilt tops and uncut leaves, but for its class we offer it for comparison with the average work of any other office in town, and as a prominent official has said that the person who printed the fown warrant, calling the voters to assemble "On Tuesday, the fifth day of NoXember next" should be the last person to say the selectmen's report was not "well printed," we issue ifth day of NoXember next" should be the last person to say the selectmen's report was not "well printed," we issue the following statement:

"The Enterprise Print" challenges the Advocate job department to submit an average copy of the town warrant recently printed at that office in competition with the very identical selectmen's report the Advocate alleges to be not "well printed" upon the following conditions:

The BOARD OF HEALTH calls the attention of the inhabitants of Belmont to the following Statutes in regard to vaccination.

P. S. 80.

VACCINATION.

VACCINATION.

Acts of 1894, 515, § 1. Parents and guardians shall cause their children and ward to be duly vaccinated before they attain the age of two years, except as provided in section two of this act. For every year's neglect the party offending shall forfeit the sum of Five Deliars.

Acts of 1894, 515, § 2. All children who shall present a certificate signed by a regular practicing physician that they are unfit subjects for vaccination shall not be subject to the provision of section nine of chapter forty-seven of the Public Stautes excluding unvaccinated children from public schools, and all children upons such a certificate shall be exempted from the provisions of this act, and the parents and guardians of such children shall not be liable to the penalties imposed by section one of this act.

Acts of 1894, 515, § 3. The board of health in any city or town shall require and enforce the vaccination and re-vaccination of all the inhabit ants thereof whenever in the opinion of said board the public health or safety requires such action. Every person over twenty-one years of age, not under guardianship, who neglects to comply with such requirement shall forfeit the sum of Five Dollars.

Owing to the prevalence of Small Pox in Boston and vicinity, the safety of the public demands that every person shall be protected by successful vaccination or re-vaccination. The Board of Health will furnish

He will also be at Waverley in the DANIEL BUTLER SCHOOL, on Friday Evenings between the hours of 7.30 and 8.30, and Saturday Afternoons between the hours of 3 and 4.

BELMONT BOARD OF HEALTH, GEORGE A. PRENTISS, JOHN FENDERSON, WM. LYMAN UNDERWOOD.

Belmont, Nov. 16, 1901.

Vaccinate. Vaccinate. AT ONCE.

The continual and increasing prevalence of Small Pox in the vicinity of Arlington renders it imperative for us to again urge all residents of this town that they should at once attend to the vaccination and re-vaccination of all persons in their households.

Seventeen new cases are reported in Boston, most of whom were either never vaccinated or revaccinated. It has invaded towns adjacent to Arlington, and we must be prepared to prevent its appearance here if possible. The original process of this epidemic and no valid objections exist to its enforcement.
